

High hopes as Jelfs joins Fusion team

Looking out from the top of the building at 7 Bennetts Hill, Birmingham, is Pollie Jelfs.

What is she looking for? Future opportunities in project management now that she has joined Fusion Building Consultancy as its new Birmingham-based director.

Pollie joins the firm's Livery Street office from rival CB Richard Ellis Building Consultancy, where she was an associate director.

Her brief is to widen Fusion's range of professional consultancy advice through her expertise in due diligence, project management and project co-ordination.

The qualified chartered surveyor brings with her a wealth of experience in advising on major building projects.

She recently worked on a major sale of leisure funds, and on the development of large new office premises and leisure schemes throughout the UK.

"I am delighted to have joined a successful dynamic consultancy that is large enough to offer wide-ranging advice yet small enough to maintain value-for-money services and personal attention," says Pollie.

Celebrating its second year in business, Fusion has offices in Birmingham and Guildford, with a client list that ranges from owner-occupiers, retailers and manufacturers to developers and investment managers.

Recent projects include acting for The Camping & Caravanning Club on the development monitoring of a new 30,000 sq ft headquarters, project managing the fit-out of UK Athletics' new offices, and project managing a new 48-apartment complex in Liverpool.
